We all dream of a job where the hours are short, the work is interesting, and our workplace is in a great location.

Well, what about a job on an island? Two years ago, the Australian province of Queensland advertised a job on

Hamilton Island for a person to promote tourism there. (1) .....The job involved living on the island and welcoming tourists there, as well as posting a blog and keeping a photo diary. (2) .....The posts had to be interesting enough to attract people to visit the island, and not just videos of someone walking along a beach. The person who was chosen got free accommodation, a salary of $150,000, and return flights. (3)..... It sounds like the perfect job, and a lot of candidates sent in their applications. (4) .....Well, you had to be fluent in English to start with, as you had to talk with tourists as well as the media. (5) .....This is because the candidate would spend time snorkelling or diving with tourists. In addition, you had to be adventurous and ready to try out new things. If you like a challenge, such a job could definitely be for you!

- a So what skills did they need to get the job?
- b The island is located near the Great Barrier Reef, one of the top tourist sites in the country.
- c They also had full insurance in case of any health problems.
- d There are a few other people on the island who do the same job.
- e You also had to be able to swim well. f This isn't as easy as it sounds.
- g You could spend a lot of time relaxing on the beach.

DREAM OR NIGHTMARE?

We'd been discussing fame in our English lessons at school and our teacher had told us to write a project on one celebrity's problems with fame. Surfing the Internet, I was fascinated by some of the stories but, when my mum suggested it was time for bed, I still hadn't found one particular celebrity that I felt inspired to write about. As I lay in bed, I was still thinking about everything I'd read, all of which made me very thankful that I was an anonymous person from South London. Eventually, I dropped off to sleep but my mind wouldn't let me rest. 1. _____ The media followed me everywhere and, despite my inexperience, it was expected that I would win the Wimbledon championships. I was enjoying it but then came the tournament and I crashed out in the fourth round. 2. _____ Headlines mocked not only my tennis skills but also my accent, hairstyle and 'dull character'. Then, suddenly I was in the final of a different tournament. The media doubted my chances but I won. I won everything, Olympics gold medals, Wimbledon and other tournaments. Suddenly I was a national hero once more. 3. _____ In real life I might have agreed but in my dream I found myself alone in the middle of the ocean, desperately trying to hide. I woke up in a sweat, relieved that my ordeal was over and knowing exactly who I would write about. Andy Murray, the tennis player whose career my dream had so closely mirrored. It was early but I switched on my computer and started writing. As I did, I wondered why the media seemed to get so much pleasure from building people up and then knocking them down again. Any new sportsperson or actor or band is immediately proclaimed to be the new Beatles, the new Pele, the new Marilyn Monroe. 4. _____ Then comes the backlash. Inevitably, the chosen few turn out not to be as talented as the stars they were compared to. It isn't their fault but that doesn't matter. The media turns on them. They even accuse them of being arrogant and believing the hype that surrounds them. Now I knew that in most cases it was just journalists trying to sell a few more copies of their newspapers or magazines. After all, it had happened to me!

- A For a while they are treated like royalty. They can do no wrong.
- B In my dreams, I was a tennis player. The best young player in the country, Evan Hooper.
- C Journalists who had written hurtful articles about me now lined up, smiles on their faces, expecting interviews.
- D This sudden mood change can affect stars badly. It's difficult to concentrate when faced with such headlines.
- E Suddenly the mood changed. No longer 'Super Hooper' I was now 'Hopeless Hooper'.

TEXT 1

Completely by chance, in the corner of my school library, I've come across a fascinating book. It is a diary written about 100 years ago by a teenage girl called Liza. She must have had a literary bent as her diary is a gripping read. The school Liza was attending was a rural school. Children there were lucky to have one because many towns didn't possess a school in those days. The local community was fully responsible for maintaining it, as well as hiring a school teacher. Parents always supported the teacher and acted accordingly to whatever they suggested.

But, as the farmer's calendar dictated the school year, the school was attended only during those months when children didn't need to help their parents.

Attendance was hardly ever perfect. The journey to and from school depended on the weather, which, if severe, forced many children to stay at home. Never, however, does Liza complain in her diary about the strenuous walk across the fields to get to school in time as classes always began punctually. If someone arrived late, he or she wasn't allowed to enter the school till the next break.

Classrooms must have been chaotic as the school was run in just one room. That meant students of all ages and levels in one space. Managing such a crowd can't have been a simple task for the teacher. There was also a lot to wish for as far as teaching aids are concerned. Children had their own slates and chalk but shared textbooks.

To practice their handwriting, however, the teacher let them use paper, quills and pencils. In her diary, Liza describes a bird's quill dipped in an ink pot and pencils laboriously sharpened with a knife!

The lessons aimed at three R's - reading, writing and arithmetic, but the essential book was the Bible. Liza mentions memorising lots of texts and reciting them in front of the class, which was actually quite enjoyable for her.

As underprivileged as the area was that she lived in, Liza felt fortunate to have been sent to school by her parents. In those times, most girls weren't sent to school at all. They were taught to sew, cook or behave politely but stayed illiterate.

1 According to the text, Liza's school was

- A financed by local people.
- B only for local families.
- C one of a few in the area.
- D open all year round.

2 In her diary, Liza

- A describes the textbook she used.
- B mentions some classroom objects.
- C criticises the chaotic lessons.
- D complains about journeys to school.

3 Which of these statements is true according to the text?

- A Liza disliked reciting texts in the classroom.
- B Liza preferred to learn to sew at home.
- C Liza enjoyed arithmetic more than writing.
- D Liza appreciated the chance to attend school.

TEXT 2

Hi everybody,

My parents were offered a job in Amsterdam, so last month we moved into a flat in the residential area, twenty minutes from the centre. Since that time I've been attending a modern, international school. The building is lovely. There are a lot of multifunctional zones so we don't need to spend the whole day in one classroom. There is the most modern multimedia centre I've ever seen, a music room and an indoor gym. As for the location, the school overlooks a park, which provides the opportunity to study outdoors. A perfect location, don't you think? I felt rather insecure on the first day but I must admit I received a very warm welcome from my classmates. Some of them had joined the class not long before me, so we were all in the same boat. That's probably why they are all so helpful.

The international curriculum is focused on creative problem-solving. We cooperate on projects in every subject. The teachers direct us through a process of acquiring knowledge and applying it to project work. I guess I am really lucky to be here. Not many of my old friends have a chance to work in multinational groups every day. After three months I must say that the school truly supports an individual approach towards education. I hope I will use this opportunity to develop and gain lots of new, international friends.

4 Which of the following is mentioned in the text as an opinion, not a fact?

- A The school occupies a modern multi-roomed building.
- B Not every lesson is run in the same classroom.
- C Students are helpful to others in a similar situation.
- D Teachers help students to use their skills in project work.

5 From both texts we learn that

- A students need up-to-date tools to learn efficiently.
- B children might feel privileged if they go to a particular school.
- C teachers should encourage studying in a natural environment.
- D the modern school system is based on project work.

15. Choose the correct option.

- 1 We don't know where we are. Let's stop and ask for directions / the road.
- 2 He complained continuously / costly all through our holiday.
- 3 I'm afraid it's not accessible / permanent to people in wheelchairs.
- 4 My dream is finally going to come across / true. I'm flying to Japan next week.
- 5 Our legs started to ache / hug after so many hours of walking around the city.

Unless you have spent the last few years locked away from the outside world, you will certainly at some point come .1. _____ a living statue. Now that the novelty of seeing them has worn off, they rarely attract a large 2. _____, although this doesn't stop them trying. Some draw a crowd by seeming to do the impossible. As an example, a living statue may pose in a sitting position – without a chair. Some of those gathered round may simply be watching in amazement. Almost certainly, though, .3. _____ attracts the majority is the hope that he will collapse in front of them. Now that we have got used 4. _____ such performers in our streets, our sense of wonder at the skills involved has decreased, which is a shame as what we are seeing is living artworks, as impressive as anything seen in any gallery.

1. A off B across C through D into
2. A audience B performance C attention D public
3. A that B what C which D who
4. A to see B seeing C to seeing D of seeing

17. Read the text. Match each paragraph (1–5) with the correct heading (a–f).

There is one heading that you do not need. 1 ..... The Netherlands is only a small country in the north of Europe, but it attracts huge numbers of tourists every year. Visitors are interested in the landscapes, culture, and heritage of the country, and want to experience the famous, relaxed attitude of Dutch people to life in general. The only problem is that too many people are now visiting the country, which is causing problems with transport, accommodation, and overcrowding. One famous, small village that only has 2,500 inhabitants is visited by 350,000 tourists every year – and that’s only the Chinese tourists. 2 ..... So what can be done about the problem? Both national and local governments in the Netherlands are now looking at ways to limit the number of guests. It’s not that they want to stop tourism altogether, they just want to get it under control. This may be a little controversial, especially with local businesspeople, whose firms rely on a continuous stream of customers. They will probably have to accept the changes, however, as a lot of Dutch people are now unhappy with the situation. 3 ..... One of the ways the government is looking into is to restrict the number of beds available to tourists in a particular town or city. This would mean that potential visitors would not find rooms for rent online or through travel agencies, and would therefore be unable to stay in specific locations. Another possible idea is to raise prices for certain attractions, although the number of wealthy people travelling abroad is increasing all the time. 4 ..... A more radical option might be to make it physically more difficult to spend time in certain locations. To do this, electronic gates can be installed at the entrance to old town squares or particularly attractive areas. The number of people within this zone would therefore be limited to a maximum decided upon by the local authorities. The destruction of buildings and monuments would be prevented, and the visiting experience would be nicer for all. 5 ..... Whatever methods are used, something has to be done quite quickly to prevent popular landmarks becoming theme parks. One local person expressed this by saying that it no longer felt pleasant living in a place that was like a museum. After all, modern day life still has to go on, and we can’t expect local residents to dress and behave as if they were living two hundred years ago.

- a Bad for business
- b Why people come
- c Means of transport
- d Stop the crowds
- e Life in the past
- f Nowhere to stay

A NEW IDEA FOR YOUR HOLIDAYS?

When newspapers and websites list the ‘must see places’ of the world, they usually include beauty spots such as the Grand Canyon or romantic cities such as Venice or Rome. However, one list published recently 1. _____ the small town of Margate in Kent, south-east of London, in its top 10 places to visit. Many people felt it must have been a joke. Margate has been a seaside resort for over 250 years but it is no longer the attraction it once was. Over the last forty years, the town has become 2. _____ with high unemployment and closed shops. So why did so many people vote for it? There are signs that the town is trying to reinvent .3. _____ as a more cultural destination. Money from the EU .4. _____ on cleaning the town up but, still, many people believe that it has a long way to go before it makes the top 10 places to visit in Kent, never mind the world. Perhaps it was a joke after all.
